Resen Waves raises capital through West Hill Capital

Award-winning Danish renewable technology company Resen Waves is pleased to announce a £1million capital raise through West Hill Capital. The company has developed the Resen Waves Power Buoy which was recognised by Clean Energy Awards 2018 as best in stand-alone renewable solutions and most pioneering small-scale wave energy device. The new capital will be used to set up sales and marketing operations in Aberdeen focused on the offshore oil & gas sector and further research and product development in Denmark.

Founder and CEO Per Resen Steenstrup said

“Our initial target market is the $6billion offshore oil & gas decommissioning industry but our eventual aim is to replace polluting diesel generation in off-grid coastal communities and form part of the 100GW wave and tidal capacity targeted by the EU by 2050.”

UK tax-resident investors in the new shares will benefit from tax reliefs under the UK’s Enterprise Investment Scheme (EIS).

About Resen Waves

The Resen Waves Power Buoy is a small-scale wave power generator with real-time data connectivity that can generate 300W of continuous power during average wave activity. It provides a cost-effective solution for powering instruments and machinery in the oceans and is targeted at the $6billion offshore oil and gas decommissioning market. The company is working incrementally towards a utility-scale device that could eventually replace diesel generators in off-grid coastal communities, a €17billion market, and form part of the 100GW wave and tidal capacity targeted by the EU by 2050.
